Peter Whaley, Jr. House
Whaleyville
Private

c. 1860

The Peter Whaley, Jr. house is a prominent Civil War era frame dwelling that distinguishes the center of the small rural village of Whaleyville. Distinctive for its hip roof, bracketed eaves, and bracketed window and door lintels, the house stands out in the village as one of the best preserved structures. Notable as well is the use of flush weatherboards under the front porch. The current tapered post porch was added during the early twentieth century to replace the previous porch. Another dwelling in Whaleyville built in a similar manner without the decorative detail is the Zadok G. W. Purnell house, located in the northeast corner of the village. The yard of the Whaley house adds to the period character of the property with its rail fence and mature plantings.

Peter Whaley, Jr. (1830-1909) and Ann Catherine Timmons Whaley (1839-1907) occupied this well-detailed two-story house during the second half of the nineteenth century. Peter Whaley, designated at this location on the 1877 Worcester County atlas, is listed in the business directory as a merchant and railroad agent. Peter, aged 39, and Annie C., 30, are listed in the 1870 United States Census for Worcester County with their four children; Thomas, 8; Elizabeth, 6; Maud, 5; and Beulah, 2. Peter is identified as the railroad clerk with a personal estate valued at $24000. The Whaleys retained ownership of the house until September of 1903 when it was sold to Dr. Ira C. Tyndall.

Prepare both a summary paragraph and a general description of the resource and its various elements as it exists today.

The Peter Whaley, Jr. house stands on the east side of Shepards Crossing Road in the center of Whaleyville, Worcester County, Maryland. The two-story, side hall/double-pile frame house faces west with the hip roof oriented on an east/west axis.

Built around 1860, the two-story, three-bay frame dwelling is supported on a low brick foundation, and the building is largely sheathed with plain weatherboards. The medium pitched hip roof is covered with asphalt shingles. Trimming the corners of the main block are paneled pilasters, and brackets embellish the eave. Rising through the center of the house is a large corbelled cap brick chimney. A story-and-a-half frame kitchen wing extends to the rear.

The west (main) elevation is an asymmetrical facade with a side entrance and flanking six-over-six sash windows. The double-leaf paneled front doors are framed by three light sidelights. To the left of the entrance are large-size six-over-six sash windows. Stretching across the first floor and extending around to the south side is a tapered post hip roof porch supported on brick plinths. In contrast to the rest of the house, the exterior wall under the front porch is sheathed with flush weatherboards. The second floor is marked by three unevenly spaced six-over-six sash windows that are highlighted with bracketed hoods and louvered shutters.

The south side is a four-bay elevation with a combination of six-over-six sash windows and a partially glazed side door. The end bay of the porch is enclosed. Lighting the second floor are four six-over-six sash windows that have bracketed lintels and shutters as well.

The north side of the main block is treated similarly without the porch. However, in contrast to the other two sides the first floor openings--three six-over-six sash windows and a side door--are topped by bracketed lintels also. The second floor is treated the same way as the south side with four shuttered six-over-six sash windows.

The story-and-a-half frame kitchen appears contemporary with the main house. A cross gable marks the south roof, and a bracketed eave extends around the perimeter of the gable roof. A enclosed shed room extends off the east end.

The interior was not seen.
